DC RIP OFF??

The annual King of New York event was founded in the Bronx by Lou Perez in 1995. Lou ran the event every year until he handed over the reigns to me at baby bean Productions in 2006. With first Lou and now baby bean running the show, the event has gotten better and better, year after year.

In addition to the amazing athletes and enthusiastic crowds at the heart of the King of New York event, a team of great sponsors helps elevate the King of New York to the kick-ass event that it is. Not long ago, baby bean invited clothing and sneaker giant DC Shoes to join the King of New York event family of sponsors. We thought DC Shoes would be a great fit (no pun intended) but unfortunately, DC Shoes completely ignored our invitation.

So it hit us like a ton of bricks when we learned that DC Shoes had stolen the "King of New York" name and concept for its own event. Adding insult to injury, DC Shoes suggested that the "King of New York" event was its own creation!

Now, Lou and I are all about live and let live, and we considered letting DC Shoes slide. But there's a problem with that: if we didn't stop DC Shoes from using the name again, riders and skaters, along with everyone else, would begin to confuse the two events. Which event was which? Who was sponsoring what? Which event is that great event that Lou Perez started way back when? When this happens, everyone loses, most importantly all the people who have put their blood and sweat into supporting the King of New York event since 1995.

So baby bean asked DC Shoes to recognize our rights to the "King of New York" event name and not to use the name "King of New York" for events in the future. DC Shoes refused. So we now find ourselves in the middle of an expensive and stressful law suit against DC Shoes. baby bean didn't want this fight, we would rather spend our time and resources creating great events. But DC Shoes – now part of Quiksilver, Inc., a company with over two billion dollars in annual sales – decided that it would rather hide behind an expensive team of lawyers than do the right thing.

It's sad that a company like DC Shoes, started by snowboarder Ken Block and skateboarder Damon Way as footwear industry outsiders, is really no different than any other big business. Apparently, DC Shoes thinks deep corporate pockets give it the right to roll right over the little guy.

baby bean is going to do its best to make sure the King of New York event stays where it's supposed to, but it's not going to be easy. If you'd like to help, or if you just want to express what you think, let us know at dcbullshit@hotmail.com. Pass this e-mail along and spread the truth. If you want to call DC Shoes or Quiksilver yourself, go right ahead. Phone numbers are 760-599-2999 for DC and 714-889-2200 for Quiksilver. Thanks for listening.

nike did something similar with a tour called "major threat" or some shit, i read about it in this punk magazine back when i was all into that stuff.

DCs also gone along and done a "king of barcelona" and "king of new york" which were featured in the last issue of the skateboard mag.

the rip off is obvious, but are they really the first people to use the term "king of new york"? doubtful.

ok. i work for quiksilver and have deep ties at corporate so hopefully i can help clarify this from quik's side. first of all, yes, quiksilver does own DC shoe co and aids in their funding. but what most people do not know is that DC acts as a separate, corporate, decision-making entity from quiksilver. the quik home office in california does not house any DC staff or warehouse space, DC's corporate operations and warehousing are both based in vista, CA. DC makes their own decisions independent of quiksilver, although quiksilver does have power of attorney to intervene in larger, more serious issues. this issue is considered serious, but DC made their own decisions and choices with regards to the king of new york contest name and the decision to take legal action.

yes, i'm playing the devil's advocate, but i feel like both sides of the story need to be heard. mainly, quiksilver, as a successful multi-national corporation (which, mind you, was started by 2 australian surfers sewing boardshorts out of their parents' garages), left the responsibility of decision making up to DC. DC's decisions are out of line for sure, but there's no need to rip on quik for being (indirectly) involved. DC is a corporate entity of their own, and would most likely have pursued the same course of action whether quik owned them or not.

but yeah, thats a low blow on DC's part. i agree on that for sure.

as all of you may know, we have a group of talented BMX athletes being sponsored by this company. how is this affecting them, those whose place of origin is New York? What does Edwin De La Rosa have to say about this dilemma?

This is an interesting question, does any of the DC sponsored riders have a Q&A on the board? I wonder if DC have inadvertently shot themselves in the foot in regards their New York sponsored riders such as Edwin? That might sound a bit over the top I know but I'm sure Edwin or the like would have something to say about this and I'm sure they'd rather stick up for fellow New Yorkers than a big corporate bastard.

Thanks! re:King of New York

What up fellas. First, I want to thank you guys on behalf of myself and Lou Perez for your support of the King of New York. We deeply appreciate it.

There are a couple things I did want to point out for clarity:

-The first person who ever really contacted us from the other side was an attorney from Quiksilver, who has a Quiksilver e-mail address and put both DC and Quik logos at the end of his e-mail. We dealt with him until they got an NYC law firm involved.

-Please don't boycott Mullaly. The Mullaly event is where we've had the King of New York since 1995. See, that's exactly part of why we're doing this, it's confusing to all.

Finally, we would welcome feedback, whether it be positive or negative, from Edwin and all DC BMX athletes (or skate, for that matter) about what DC has done and continues to do.

Thanks again everyone.

but yeah, thats a low blow on DC's part. i agree on that for sure.

see, here's my problem.

-Quik has power of attorney over DC for the purpose of dealing with serious issues.
-this issue is considered "serious" by your own admission. DC's actions are considered "out of line" by your own admission.

and yet...

"there's no need to rip on quik"

why the fuck not?

you have admitted that this situation is "serious". issues like this are the reason for quiksilver having power of attorney, yet quiksilver is sticking their head in the sand and ignoring this...why? because quiksilver is only interested in the amount of money that DC makes them every quarter.

yeah, you make the bullshit speech about the "two kids in their parents' garage sewing swimsuits", trying to make it seem like your corporation is somehow "in tune with the average kid", get the fuck outta here. spare me your carefully contrived marketing, you don't fool me. quiksilver makes millions per year, same with DC.

what's the purpose of snaking the naming/branding rights of a (relatively speaking) tiny contest, except to a) be a real bunch of corporate dickheads, and b) to suck up and consolidate everything under your corporate umbrella?

nothing is being done by quiksilver for one reason: MONEY. DC makes some money off of this tiny contest, it all goes under the quiksilver umbrella....which conveniently bumps up shares of the

so yeah, spare me the line about the kids in the garage. if you still held that image so dear to your hearts over at quiksilver, then quiksilver would tell its subsidiary company DC to stop doing what its doing....but that won't happen because the two kids in the garage have turned into a couple of suit-wearing corporate douchebags who are more concerned with the bottom line of their stock price than helping to spread the joy of surfing/skateboarding/bmx.
